

Right plants; right places!

The temperature is due to rise this coming week and as we head into mid Summer with holidays approaching, many of us will be outdoors. Some of us prefer the heat, whereas others seek shade.

Wildflowers are just the same, sun-lovers or those suited to shade, so why not take a look at our top ideas to find the right wildflowers for your favourite spot.....

Wildflowers for shade.

At the edge of a tree canopy, by a shaded hedge or border, there are wildflowers that thrive in these cooler conditions with lower light levels .

Here are a few suggestions for your shady glade:

Shady plants can be planted throughout the Summer and early Autumn just remember to water well before and after planting - preferably in the morning.

Wildflowers for sun.

Wildflowers of grassland and meadow will grow well in full sun and dry conditions. For a sunny, exposed border, meadow, or even patio pots in full sun, here are a few wildflower suggestions which will continue to flower across the Summer months:

Buy Ox eye daisy now

It is best to plant small numbers of sun loving plants in the Summer so they can be watered well in the initial stages.

Water both before planting and after - preferably in the morning.

Wildflowers as natural dye plants:

Did you know that wildflowers have been used to produce natural dyes for thousands of years. Natural dyes are now having a resurgence as ancient techniques are regaining popularity and of course natural dyes are a renewable resource over and above synthetic dyes.

We now have several customers who buy our wildflowers for their natural dye properties, so if you're interested to get started on your own project here are a few ideas:

Natural dye plants:

Lady's bedstraw - a red dye plant

Dyers greenweed - a yellow dye plant

Tansy - a yellow dye plant

St Johns wort - a red dye plant
